JUVENILE ARTHRITIS AWARENESS MONTH

July is Juvenile Arthritis Awareness Month — a time when we put a spotlight on JA, so more people know what living with it is like. Parents who suspect their child may have arthritis are encouraged to consult a pediatric rheumatologist as soon as possible. Early diagnosis and treatment are the best bet for avoiding permanent joint damage and improving the chance of remission.

JA AFFECTS 300,000 FAMILIES

An estimated 300,000 families in the U.S. face the major disruptions JA can cause, making the disease worth acknowledging and doing something about. More children battle JA than do those who have cystic fibrosis, juvenile diabetes and leukemia combined.

Juvenile arthritis and related diseases in kids have some things in common with adult arthritis, but they're not the same. Typically, there's joint pain, swelling, redness and warmth. Otherwise, the many types of JA affect different kids in different ways. They can involve the eyes, skin, heart, lungs and gastrointestinal tract.

ABOUT THE OPEN NET FOUNDATION

Childhood illnesses and diseases are sometimes the most difficult to accept. When health complications place limitations on a child's life there is a sense of fairness that is violated. Many times, the child is prevented from experiencing some of life's enjoyments that many people take for granted. The Open Net Foundation was formed for the purpose of raising funds for non-profit organizations and facilities that provide treatment, counseling, education, and/or assistance for childhood health problems, disabilities or illnesses. To carry out this purpose, it shall be the policy of the Open Net Foundation to do all things necessary or appropriate to maintain the highest quality of programs and events for those served.

The Open Net Foundation leads events that generate funding for non-profit organizations and facilities that provide treatment, counseling, education or assistance for childhood health problems, disabilities, or illnesses.

For the Chowder Cup team, each player was asked to raise a minimum of $325 to participate. Each player was provided with a profile on our website that tracked their donation totals. Several players managed to surpass their target.
